Update: I had no idea this app turned into a pregnancy tracker after you missed a period. Amazing!!! Adding 1 more star for a full 5 star review. I still think that free content is much better than paid content and anonymous chat should go away, so much There. The free features of this application are a million times more valuable than the features paid. The period and ovulation tracker was of paramount importance to my husband and I conception – I'm terrible at watching these things on my own (usually my period just slips up on me). The symptom tracker and diving into your ## cycle day feature were particularly useful in recognizing that I was showing signs of being pregnant, despite just the PMS experience. Because the free features were so useful, I tried the trial of the paid version and was very disappointed disappointed what it contained. Especially chatting with other future mothers... Oh my God, getting rid of it, it's just a platform for women to work with each other in a frenzy over trying to conceive. It's comical at first, someone else wants to conceive so badly that they mimic the symptoms? and then sad, I cry at work right now because two other women are pregnant and I'm not, and if you keep reading it starts eating away at you... everything posted is so negative. this app is extremely useful for tracking periods, and has given me mostly accurate predictions so far! it's been away a day or twice when I first started using it because it hadn't adapted to my cycle yet, but since then I haven't had any problems. I love ideas where it gives information about my period and the different changes that come along with a period, and I especially love that you can comment anonymously on the posts and get help from and give help to the community, by far, my favorite thing about flo application is that you can have it give you reminders to drink water, take medication, and weigh yourself if that's something that concerns you! the reminders are extremely useful to me as my meds are on ADHD, so I need a reminder so I really remember getting them lol! the only thing I would like to set is that my water bottle has metric marks, but I live in America, so I need to convert the metric into ounces to track my water because the only way to use metric for water is to switch the entire application over to metric. this is not a huge deal because Google is a very good converter, but it's just something I've noticed. overall, this is a great app and I've recommended it to friends and family, and now I'm recommending it to you! Hi! Thank you for using Flo and reaching out! You can turn off measurement system mode if you follow these steps: More > Settings > Unable to measure system. I hope it helps! Good greetings, Dina so I used this app for my period and it was great until my period change and I came in a week earlier which was perfect for my weekend off because we were planning to get pregnant and my ovulation date was set for a specific day. Well I was in my period a day or two more so I thought it would probably change my ovulation date. Well my trip was set to be at least about 2 to 3 weeks away and I kept checking the app to make sure and see if my ovulation date was going to change well without changing it to stay in. and make sure I refresh my app just in case and stayed the same. Now the day I get to my destinations for my trip is my ovulation day which was in the app which is what we were depending on. Three days later I go to the app to highlight the fact that we made love and the ovulation date changed the day before I arrived on my trip. Immediately I was upset because it seems like I may have missed the ovulation day due to the fact that the app wasn't updated until after my ovulation date was originally set. So I deleted the app because of it. This. very upsetting when you are trying to get pregnant and your ovulation date just seems to be changing along with your fertile day changes I just think that this is something to consider I no longer want to use this app. Hi there! Thank you for your feedback. You could contact us directly from the application (More-Contact Support), describing your problem and without deleting symbols from the message, so we can help you.
